Ernest Jones, Sigmund Freud: Life and Work: Volume Three: The Last Phase 1919–1939, 3rd edn (London: The Hogarth Press, 1957), p. 241.

LONDON: THE END 241

The first member of the family to be allowed to travel was Minna Bernays, whom Dorothy Barlingham fetched from the sanatorium and escorted to London; they left Vienna on May 5. Freud's eldest son, Martin (whose wife and children were already in Paris), and daughter, Mathilde Hollitscher (with her husband), both managed to get away before their parents. The former reached London on May 16 and the latter on May 26. Mathilde did the housekeeping in the first house Freud occupied in London, after which she and her husband rented a flat for themselves.

Freud retained his ironic attitude towards the complicated formalities that had to be gone through. One of the conditions for being granted an exit visum was that he sign a document that ran as follows: 'I, Prof. Freud, hereby confirm that after the Anschluss of Austria to the German Reich I have been treated by the German authorities and particularly by the Gestapo with all the respect and consideration due to my scientific reputation, that I could live and work in full freedom, that I could continue to pursue my activities in every way I desired, that I found full support from all concerned in this respect, and that I have not the slightest reason for any complaint.'<sup>3</sup> When the Nazi Commissar brought it along Freud had of course no compunction in signing it, but he asked if he might be allowed to add a sentence, which was: 'I can heartily recommend the Gestapo to anyone.'

Again when Indra took a photograph of him Freud's comment was: 'It is one of my best likenesses. The Nazis will be very much obliged to you, for now they will be sure it is me when they hang it in the Hall dedicated in honour of their scholars.'

Even in these anxious times Freud's thoughtfulness for other people did not desert him. When Hanna Breuer, the widow of Robert Breuer, Josef Breuer's eldest son, approached him with a request for help in emigrating he at once asked her daughter, Marie, to come to see him. He was extremely kind to her and he
